Feminist Amy Schumer was also widely lauded by feminists for her speech.

Unless you believe drunk women can't consent, then this is simply avoiding a false rape accusation by a drunk woman.

If you believe drunk people can't give consent then I point you to Amy Schumer, feminist who gave a much lauded speech in which she detailed having sex with a man so drunk he was passing in and out of consciousness.

I don't have to, because I'm not advancing the belief that women, on average, oppress men more than men oppress women.

So, once again, let's see if you've based your belief on a rational appraisal or a unconscious misogynist impulse.

What's your strongest argument against women being oppressed by men more on average than men being oppressed by women.

If you've looked at the other side, what is the strongest argument against women being oppressed by men on average more than men are oppressed by women?

Once again, what's the strongest argument, in your opinion, against your belief that women are oppressed by men on average more than men are oppressed by women.

It is becoming obvious that you, as a feminist, do not base your belief that men on average oppress women on average on a rational analysis--which requires look at both sides of the argument both pro and con.

Jeeze, I guess I need to c+p more often! This is from the original:

Feminist Mary Koss scrubs male victims of rape by women from government statistics:

<http://youtu.be/0ncjGFIFPJI> (<http://youtu.be/0ncjGFIFPJI>)

From the very beginning I'm quite obviously referencing someone erasing victims from the statistics _themselves_. Not two pence opinion articles.

You keep calling my opinions "shitty" and "wrong" and yet you don't have any interest in addressing them.

That's a funny way to approach life. Usually when I see something I find "shitty" or "wrong" I try to develop an argument to justify my position. Or if it can't be justified I spend a bit of time pondering why I had that knee jerk reaction.

If you didn't hear her imply that Adele was taken out of context, then you may have been listening to a censored version of the talk.

August isn't "erasing" female victims, he's offering his own analysis of statistics. If he were erasing female victims he'd be in government advising them to define rape to exclude "rape by penetration" thus the majority of female rape victims.

It's not the best argument against the idea that men oppress women more than women oppress men. That's because we're not talking about other forms of oppression aside from men oppressing women more than women oppress men so oppression based on other factors are not relevant.

Again, what is your best argument against the idea that men oppress women, on average, more than women oppress men. Without bringing in tangents about other forms of oppression that do not relate.

That's not an argument against women being more oppressed by men than men are by women, on average.

It's simply stating that race and class based oppression exists.

Try again. Although I have to confess at this point it's looking like you base your belief less on a rational analysis and more on internalized misogyny.
